A Good Roof

The decrepit structure looked its age. Windows broken. Metal rusted. One wall collapsing, another already caved in. Years of neglect and some recent abuse from vandals were the death knell of this once beautiful property.

Long ago it was state-of-the-art. Today, it was in a hapless state. Past its prime, far beyond a makeover – extreme or otherwise – the old building had served its purpose and was fading fast.

As an old barn on our family's farm began to get wobbly and shaky, my dad once told me that old wooden barns would lean every which way, but would not fall as long as their metal roofs stayed on. He said once the roof started to peel away or was damaged by wind, it wouldn't be long before everything came tumbling down.

I thought about those words long and hard and found this human connection: When we keep our head in any situation, we can feel weak, we can sway back and forth in a storm, but we won't fall. It's when we lose our head, we fail. So maintain a good roof in your life...keep your head about you in all circumstances.
