Sunday Drive

As I've said many times before, there's nothing more cherished by our family than the freedom of a drive – often a long drive to nowhere. What many people would call wasteful of both energy and time, we describe as therapeutic - for there isn't a problem or issue that doesn't shrink along the way.

Drives permit us to take our minds off of everyday-ness...you know, the routine around which our lives are built. Occasionally there is a destination in mind when we pull away from the house. More often than not, we just go. Usually a stop for food is included, but not always.

Recently, a Sunday drive to nowhere was twice blessed. First, because the dear couple we picked up along the way offered to fill our tank with fuel from their farm. It wasn't the first time they've done so and I hope their day in our limousine covered the cost of the gas in many ways. Second, we visited a friend who opened a restaurant and when paying our bill, she said it was on the house.

All in all, only the laughter outweighed the fellowship. It was indeed a wonderful day for a beneficial drive.
