Sixth Sense

Have you noticed how loud people talk lately? It's as if everyone has suddenly undergone major hearing loss. This seems especially true at restaurants. Perhaps I'm nosy - I can't help but hear most conversations going on around me. My theory is people always elevate their voices when speaking on cell phones and since we're on those things all the time, we've just naturally brought our speaking voices up to the same level.

Regardless, I – and the vast majority of the other patrons at the restaurant – recently overheard a discussion between two people concerning the positive attributes of another. Whoever they were talking about would have been pleased because they were described as pleasant and good looking with "a keen sense of human". Yes, a keen sense of human!

After cleaning the ice tea off of my chin, I gave some thought to what I heard and instead of mentally condemning the speaker for incorrectly saying "a keen sense of humor, I realized that her malapropism was perfect. Imagine the world if we all had a keener sense of human.
